Miscellaneous. Excessive Smoking.

To say that smoking in moderation like drinking wine in moderation, tends to destroy mind and body, would be to assert what the experience of threefourths of the civilized world is opposed to. But no one who is conversant with disease can doubt for a moment that smoking to excess, or immoderately, ends in destruction of mind and body. Some of the revelations on this subject are startling. Some young men, still in their teens, smoke forty or fifty cigars daily .-Some young gentlemen of rank have assured me that at college they have smoked from five in the afternoon until three or four in the morning for weeks together .-The effect of excessive smoking is to de press the circulation, the heart become weak, irregular in its action, and the pulse is scarcely to be felt. The patient pecomes frightened, and loses resolution : once a bold rider, he cannot mount his horse; a carriage passing him rapidly in the street alarms him; his appetite fails him; his mind fills with horrors-imaginary crimes and imaginary punishments, This state of things sometimes continues for years. At length the patient diesoften, very often, suddenly. The case is explained. The muscular structure of the heart-of that organ which is to distribute strength and power to every part of the system-is imperfect in its action : the left side is thin, and in some cases in which sudden death has occurred, there is little more than a strip of muscular fibre new vice. How many young men at school and college used to smoke fifty years ago? Some half-a-dozen. How many do now? The answer is-legion Boys of twelve years old are seen early in the morning walking the streets with cigars in their mouths. Youths have consulted me who have just come from the of smoking constantly, and these are lads just hoping to begin the business of life. -Letter by Dr. Seymour upon "Private Lunatic Asylums."

Ministerial Difficulties.

A clergyman in a mining village not far from Riccarton, in the course of his pastorial visits called at a domicile of a collier in his parish. Inquiring of the woman he saw, and whom he presumed to be the wife, if her husband was at home, she answered: "Deed na, Str, he's at his work." "Is your husband, my good woman, a communicant?" "A communicant! He's nacthing of the kind—he's just a collier!" Astonished at the good woman, a communicant?" "A com-municant! He's naething o' the kindhe's just a collier !" Astonished at the ignorance displayed, the minister could not avoid ejaculating, "Oh, what darkness!" The collier's spouse, understanding the language literally, not figuratively, was also something astonished.—
"Darkness! little ye ken o't; had ye been here before we got that extra win. been here before we got that extra window in the gable, ye would scarcely has been able to see your finger afore you."

The pastor sighed; it was his first visitation of his flock, and their ignorance certainly demanded his prayers. "I must, my good woman, put up a petition for you here," "Petition! petition!—bide awee; nae petitions will be put up here sae lang as I am in the house; but at the term we're guan owre to Newbigging, and then ye may put up as many o' them been here before we got that extra winthe term we're guan owre to Newbigging, and then ye may put up as many o' them
